

And now, very briefly, this is from me as an individual.

I am under the impression that the water shed plan is based on data that is over 20 years old. If this is so, I would strongly suspect that 20 years has brought forth enough significant changes that a revalidation of this data would be in order.

We should not enact these momentous changes until we have brought the best science to bear on the matter.

And, further, determine if we are acting in the name of real science, or junk science, or just political science.
